When we talk about complete plays like "Blasted," "Phaedra's Love," "Cleansed," and CRA (which may refer to a particular theatrical work or collection), it's essential to appreciate the diversity in style, era, and thematic focus. Each play brings a unique voice to the stage, reflecting its author's vision and the cultural moment in which it was written.

Blasted by Sarah Kane: A Modern Shock to the System

‘Blasted,’ written by Sarah Kane in 1995, is famously known for its unflinching portrayal of violence, war, and human suffering. Phaedra’s Love: A Darkly Comic Take on Classical Myth

David Hare’s ‘Phaedra’s Love’ reimagines the ancient myth of Phaedra, originally dramatized by Euripides, with a modern, cynical twist. The play focuses on themes of desire, power, and nihilism, subverting classical tragedy’s solemnity with dark humor and existential despair.
