The Birth of an Icon: Land Rover's Origin in 1948

The story of Land Rover begins in the aftermath of World War II, a period marked by innovation and reconstruction. Maurice Wilks, the chief designer at the Rover Company, envisioned a versatile, robust vehicle that could serve both agricultural and industrial purposes. Inspired by the American Jeep used during the war, the first Land Rover prototype was developed in 1947, with the official launch taking place at the Amsterdam Motor Show in April 1948.

The original Land Rover Series I was a utilitarian machine designed for durability and simplicity. Its boxy shape, aluminum body panels (due to steel shortages post-war), and four-wheel-drive system quickly set it apart from conventional vehicles of the time. This foundational model laid the groundwork for what would become a worldwide phenomenon.

Why Landy Love Since 1948 Endures: Key Features and Innovations
